All prices and policies at Skilled for Life are based on the official NDIS Price Guide. The National Disability Insurance Agency (NDIA) sets these price limits and guidelines, which are subject to review and change (typically on an annual basis). Skilled for Life will adjust its pricing and policies accordingly to ensure we remain fully aligned with the most current NDIS requirements. Our current Price Guide is available for you to view on our website.

Why do we charge for travel?

- Ensure sustainability and quality of services
- Coverage of Operational Costs: Traveling to participants' homes or community locations incurs expenses such as fuel, vehicle maintenance, parking fees, and tolls. Charging for travel allows providers to offset these operational costs, ensuring they can continue to offer services without compromising quality.
- Fair Compensation for Workers: Therapists often spend significant time traveling between appointments. Charging for travel time ensures that workers are fairly compensated for all the time they dedicate to a participant, not just the time spent delivering direct support.
- Alignment with NDIS Pricing Guidelines: The NDIS Pricing Arrangements and Price Limits outline specific guidelines for charging travel costs. These include:
 - Provider Travel – Labour Costs: Compensation for the time support workers spend traveling to and from a participant's location.
 - Provider Travel – Non-Labour Costs: Reimbursement for expenses like fuel, parking, and tolls.
- Travel Time Limits: The NDIS sets maximum travel time allowances based on geographic zones, ensuring that charges are reasonable and reflect the time required to deliver services.
- Ensuring Service Availability: Charging for travel helps providers maintain a broad service area, enabling them to support participants in various locations, including rural and remote areas. Without these charges, providers might be unable to cover the costs of reaching distant participants .

We are committed to ensuring continuity of our services!
